The Rules of Cornhole

Playing with two or four players, the rules of Cornhole are the same. Use a coin toss for the team tossing first. Each team will alternate throwing their bags across the playing field. Players can throw from anywhere they want as long as their feet do not go past the front edge of the board. If a player crosses the front of the board, a foul is called and the opposing team may determine their own method of punishment. After each team has thrown all of their bags, you may begin scoring.

Any bag landed on top of the board is worth one point, any bag that went in the hole is worth three points, equal points on the board or in the hole are canceled out, and any bag that landed on the ground or touched the ground before landing on the board is removed from scoring. For example, if your team scored five points and the opposing team scored three points, your overall score will be two points and you will move onto the next round with a score of 2-0. The team that has scored the most points in that "round" will throw first in the next set of tosses and if no team scores any points in a round, then whoever threw first in the previous round will throw first in the upcoming round. The game is won when a team reaches 21 points.
